1. The author of Hebrews quotes from Psalm 95, five different times in Hebrews 3-4.
  - A. What is the main point that the author of Hebrews is making as he draws from this Psalm?
  - B. The truth that was given to Moses and the Israelites about entering the rest of God, was reiterated by David to his audience hundreds of years after Moses, and the same truth was reiterated by the author of Hebrews to his audience hundreds of years after David. How is the truth being proclaimed here timeless? Does this mean that the same truth should apply to us today? If so, how?
2. Read Psalm 95 in its entirety.
  - A. The Psalm is divided up into a “Do” section and a “Do not” section, where is the divide?
  - B. According to this Psalm, list the “Do’s” and the “Do not’s” that are mentioned.
Do’s:
Do not’s:
3. As you read Psalm 95, do you find that there is a connectivity between worship, submission, and obedience within the Psalm? How can these be better connected in our own lives?
4. Specifically list what they are praising God for in Psalm 95.
5. This brief Psalm of praise is exalting God, humbling man, and calling on worshippers not to disobey God. How do the themes in this Psalm compare to contemporary worship music of our day?
6. Would a higher view of God in personal and corporate worship also lead you to a higher expectation of obedience, and vice versa (lower view of God in worship = lower obedience)? Explain.
