Joe Biden ready to use nuclear weapons first in 'extreme circumstances'

Joe Biden is prepared to use nuclear weapons first in “extreme circumstances” after abandoning plans to drastically water down US policy.

The US president’s U-turn came after pressure from allies and the Pentagon and amid fears that Vladimir Putin may resort to deploying weapons of mass destruction in the coming months.

The US currently allows itself to use nuclear weapons to “defend the vital interests of the United States, its allies, and partners”, and in response to “significant non-nuclear strategic attacks”.

However, for years Mr Biden has sought to rein that back, and in 2017 said: “The sole purpose of our nuclear arsenal is to deter and, if necessary, retaliate, for a nuclear attack against the United States and its allies.”

Mr Biden included his desire to minimise the role of nuclear weapons in his 2020 presidential campaign. He was considering announcing the move earlier this year, but the decision was delayed amid the build-up of Russian forces on the Ukraine border, The Telegraph understands.

“In the current situation, it’s very challenging to make the case for ‘sole purpose’,” an arms control expert who consulted with Mr Biden’s nuclear policy officials said. “The optics are extremely bad when Russia is being as threatening as it is. You don’t want to look weak.

“It was on the president’s desk, awaiting his decision, then Ukraine happened. Pre-Ukraine, there was a chance the president would have gone ahead and made a ‘sole purpose’ declaration. He wanted to do that, but he didn’t have a lot of support in the Pentagon.”

Mr Biden’s decision came as he faced pressure to set a “red line” for how to respond to any use of chemical weapons by Putin in Ukraine.

Speaking in Brussels on Thursday, he said the West would respond “in kind” but declined to say whether it would lead to military intervention.

In 2020, Russia published a doctrine outlining its possible use of nuclear weapons. It detailed four justifications – a ballistic missile attack against Russia or an ally, use of a nuclear weapon by an enemy, an attack on a Russian nuclear weapons site or any attack threatening the existence of Russia.

Last month, Putin ordered that his nuclear forces be put on high alert.

As the US president, Mr Biden has the only authority to launch America’s nuclear weapons.

His new policy will say that the “fundamental role” of the country’s nuclear weapons is to deter nuclear attacks, US officials told the Wall Street Journal. However, that will still allow them to be used in “extreme circumstances” as a deterrent against chemical, biological, massive conventional and even potentially cyber attacks, the officials said.

Allies in Europe had been concerned that Mr Biden’s original plan would weaken deterrence against a massive conventional or chemical and biological attack by Russia on Nato.

Japan feared that the US explicitly limiting itself to retaliation against a nuclear strike could one day leave it open to an overwhelming conventional attack by China.

Supporters of Mr Biden’s original, more limited “sole purpose” campaign pledge will be disappointed. “With ‘sole purpose’ you’re still safe, you’re still saying ‘if you want to nuke us you’re going to die’. That’s the essence of deterrence,” said one member of the nuclear policy community who backed it.

“Even Putin would know if he does one or two nukes in Ukraine he can’t get away with it.”

Putin's invasion of Ukraine has delayed the completion of Mr Biden's overall defence strategy, of which the nuclear review is part. The strategy was determined to be too focused on China and is being amended to acknowledge the increased Russian threat.

The Federation of American Scientists had called Mr Biden's previous comments about limiting options for nuclear weapons use "unusually explicit".

In a report last year, it said: "Sole purpose' will be a contentious idea under any circumstances. Allied governments, advocates of various aspects of the current nuclear weapons policies and political opponents are understandably concerned about the president's statements."

According to Duyeon Kim, a senior fellow at the Center for a New American Security, "nuclear deterrence is effective when adversaries know the United States would actually use its nuclear weapons".

Mr Biden had faced opposition from Republicans in his desire to diminish the role of nuclear weapons in deterrence.

Some Democrats had wanted him to go even further than he hoped to and had urged the adoption of a so-called "no first use" policy, which could have included potentially taking practical steps to slow down how quickly warheads could be launched.

China is the only nuclear power to have a "no first use" policy, but there are US doubts about its credibility. India's "no first use" policy still allows it to respond with nuclear weapons to a biological or chemical attack.

The UK maintains a policy of strategic ambiguity which does not rule out using them first. According to the Ministry of Defence, the UK is "deliberately ambiguous about precisely when, how, and at what scale we would use our weapons. This ensures the deterrent's effectiveness is not undermined and complicates the calculations of a potential aggressor".

Russia Reasserts Its Option To Use Nuclear Weapons First

Carmine Sabia · March 26, 2022 🔥 22,621

OPINION: This article may contain commentary which reflects the author's opinion.

The Kremlin is again saber rattling on the possibility of using nuclear weapons on a first strike basis.

“Dmitry Medvedev, a former Russian president who is deputy chairman of the country’s security council, said Moscow could strike against an enemy that only used conventional weapons while Vladimir Putin’s defense minister claimed nuclear ‘readiness’ was a priority,” The Guardian reported.

“We have a special document on nuclear deterrence. This document clearly indicates the grounds on which the Russian Federation is entitled to use nuclear weapons. There are a few of them, let me remind them to you: number one is the situation, when Russia is struck by a nuclear missile. The second case is any use of other nuclear weapons against Russia or its allies,” Medvedev said.

“The third is an attack on a critical infrastructure that will have paralyzed our nuclear deterrent forces. And the fourth case is when an act of aggression is committed against Russia and its allies, which jeopardized the existence of the country itself, even without the use of nuclear weapons, that is, with the use of conventional weapons," he said.

The chairman of Russia's security council said that there was a "determination to defend the independence, sovereignty of our country, not to give anyone a reason to doubt even the slightest that we are ready to give a worthy response to any infringement on our country, on its independence".

In response, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, in an appearance by video link at Qatar's Doha Forum on Saturday, said that Russia was a threat to the entire world.

"Russia is deliberately bragging they can destroy with nuclear weapons, not only a certain country but the entire planet," he said.

Putin established the nuclear threat at the start of the war, warning that western intervention would reap "consequences you have never seen".

Western officials have said the threats may be simply an attempt to divert attention from the failure of Putin's forces to secure a swift occupation of the Ukrainian capital, Kyiv, and to make advances in other key areas of the country.

An adviser to Ukraine's defence ministry, Markian Lubkivskyi, claimed on Saturday that Russia would soon lose control of the southern city of Kherson, the first major centre to fall to the Kremlin since the war began on 24 February.

"I believe that today the city will be fully under the control of Ukrainian armed forces. We have finished in the last two days the operation in the Kyiv region so other armed forces are now focused on the southern part trying to get free Kherson and some other Ukrainian cities," he said.

The comments come on the same day that President Joe Biden said that Russian President Vladimir Putin cannot be allowed to stay in power in Russia.

President Joe Biden sent shockwaves during a speech in Poland speaking about the war between Russia and Ukraine.

The president ended his speech on Saturday in what many believed to be a reference to regime change in Russia and getting rid of Russian President Vladimir Putin, but the White House later walked back his comments.

On Putin the president said, "For God's sake this man cannot remain in power."

"This is not to be decided by Mr. Biden. It should only be a choice of the people of the Russian Federation," Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov said in response.

The White House later explained that, "The President's point was that Putin cannot be allowed to exercise power over his neighbors or the region. He was not discussing Putin's power in Russia, or regime change."

It was the end of a long speech in which he portrayed Ukraine as the front line in the fight between autocracy and democracy.

" My message to the people of Ukraine is ... we stand with you. Period," he said in front of the Royal Castle in Warsaw, Poland.

"We emerged anew in the great battle for freedom, a battle between democracy and autocracy. Between liberty and oppression. Between a rules-based order and one governed by brute force," he said. "In this battle, we need to be clear-eyed. This battle will not be won in days or months either. We need to steel ourselves for the long fight ahead."

Phase 2 of The Great Reset: War

Analysis by Dr. Joseph Mercola

- March 23, 2022

STORY AT-A-GLANCE

- We're being hit with one crisis after another, but there's nothing "organic" or natural about these crises. They seem manufactured and intentional because they all strengthen, support and further the technocratic plan for a Great Reset
- Meta, the parent company of Facebook and Instagram, has relaxed its hate speech policies in certain countries — but only as long as the hatred is directed against Russians. While hatred against an attacker is normal, one day, the designated target for "justifiable hatred" may be you
- We cannot continue to accept the idea of "justifiable hatred" — that it's OK to hate and call for violence against any one group — because the target group of the day is decided by powers that ultimately seek to destroy us all
- World war is Phase 2 of The Great Reset plan, which includes the destruction of supply chains, the energy sector, food supply and workforce, to create dependency on government, which in turn will be taken over by private interests and central banks through the collapse of the global economy
- Pandemic lockdowns have sped up the Fourth Industrial Revolution — the transhumanist dream to merge man and machine, which will allow the technocratic elite to control all of mankind — and disruptions caused by war will speed it up even further

As noted by historian and Scottish television presenter Neil Oliver in the video above, many feel like they're stuck in an "existential battle between good and evil." Perhaps you feel this "creeping malevolence" Oliver describes as well. We're being hit with one crisis after another, but there's nothing "organic" or natural about these crises.

They seem manufactured and intentional. The question on everyone's mind is "Why?" Why would anyone intentionally create fear, destruction, hatred, misery and grief? To most people, such evil is unimaginable, and therefore they don't want to believe it's being done. Yet here we are — on the brink of world war.

Seeds of Hatred Are Being Purposely Sown

While the days of peace on earth have been few in the history of mankind, we're now seeing an escalation in hatred and calls for violence and outright murder are being actively encouraged. Oliver points out that Meta, the parent company of Facebook and Instagram, has relaxed its hate speech policies in certain countries — but only as long as the hatred is directed against Russians.

While hatred against an attacker is normal, one day, the designated target for "justifiable hatred" may be you. One day, Meta may decide it's OK to call for the death of all Christians. Or all Jews. Or all white people (actually, they've already done that). Or all unvaccinated people (they did that too). You get the gist.

So, the question is, do we continue to accept the idea of "justifiable hatred" — that it's OK to hate and call for violence against any one group? Especially when we know the target group is decided by powers that ultimately seek to destroy us all?

As noted by Oliver, “We’re being manipulated as never before in history.” To refuse to acknowledge that you’re being manipulated puts you in a very dangerous place, as acknowledging that manipulation is taking place is the first step to develop resistance against it.

Right now, media, government and business leaders are fomenting hatred against Russian citizens, and even people with Russian-sounding names, who have nothing to do with Putin’s decision to go into Ukraine, and while it may feel “justifiable,” it’s dangerous in the extreme.

We just saw the same kind of rabid expressions of hatred against the unvaccinated less than a year ago. All of this hatred plays right into the hands of the technocratic elite that needs chaos and unrest in order to push their will on us. We simply must learn to resist these Pavlovian responses.

Phase 2 of The Great Reset

While Oliver does not make this connection, it seems clear to me that the drums of war are part and parcel of The Great Reset plan. The pandemic countermeasures and their devastating impact on the world economy was Part 1. War is Part 2. An anonymous correspondent recently wrote about this on WinterOak.org:¹

“Welcome to the second phase of the Great Reset: war. While the pandemic acclimatized the world to lockdowns, normalized the acceptance of experimental medications, precipitated the greatest transfer of wealth to corporations by decimating SMEs [small and medium-sized businesses] and adjusted the muscle memory of workforce operations in preparation for a cybernetic future, an additional vector was required to accelerate the economic collapse before nations can ‘Build Back Better.’”

The article presents “several ways in which the current conflict between Russia and Ukraine is the next catalyst for the World Economic Forum’s Great Reset agenda, facilitated by an interconnected web of global stakeholders and a diffuse network of public-private partnerships.”

Changes to Supply Chains and the Global Workforce

For starters, supply chains of all kinds are being disrupted at an unprecedented level and pace by the war between Russia and Ukraine. Fuel shortages and inflation are also taking off. The anonymous author predicts that, as geopolitical tensions between the NATO alliance and the Sino-Russia axis continue, “a second contraction may plunge the economy into stagflation.”

Stagflation² is an economic situation in which inflation and unemployment rates are high while economic growth slows. It’s a precarious dilemma for economic policy, because strategies that help lower inflation can also make unemployment worse. You can learn more about this in the March 10, 2022, Conversation article, “Why Stagflation Is an Economic Nightmare.”³

Universal basic income is one planned strategy that will create dependency. It will also ensure we’re all equally poor and unable to threaten their monopoly on power and wealth. This is what they mean when they’re talking about making the world ‘fair and equitable.’

“Another recession will compound global resource thirst, narrow the scope for self-sufficiency and significantly increase dependence on government subsidies,” the anonymous Winter Oak writer states. Indeed, dependence on government is a clear goal of the global cabal pushing for The Great Reset. How else can the get people to give up sovereignty over their own bodies and lives?

Universal basic income is one planned strategy that will create dependency. It will also ensure we’re all equally poor and unable to threaten their monopoly on power and wealth. This is what they mean when they’re talking about making the world “fair and equitable.”

The Fourth Industrial Revolution

As noted in the Winter Oak article, a recurring theme in Klaus Schwab's Fourth Industrial Revolution is the merger of man and machine. Technologies and scientific innovations will become extensions of our own bodies and minds. Augmented and cloud-connected humans are at the center of the next-generation workforce.

“Those spearheading the Great Reset seek to manage geopolitical risk by creating new markets which revolve around digital innovations, e-strategies, telepresence labor, artificial intelligence, robotics, nanotechnology, the Internet of Things and the Internet of Bodies,” the anonymous writer notes.

“The breakneck speed in which AI technologies are being deployed suggest that the optimization of such technologies will initially bear on traditional industries and professions which offer a safety net for hundreds of millions of workers, such as farming, retail, catering, manufacturing and the courier industries.”

Indeed, examples of jobs that are being, or will be, replaced by AI include factory workers, telemarketers, bookkeepers, ad sales, customer support, receptionists, retail sales, cashiers, certain media positions, couriers and delivery jobs, security jobs, fast food workers, taxi drivers, farmers and certain medical jobs, including surgeons and lab technicians.⁴

“While it has long been anticipated that the increased use of technology in the private sector would result in massive job losses, pandemic lockdowns and the coming disruption caused by a war will speed up this process, and many companies will be left with no other option but to lay off staff and replace them with creative technological solutions merely for the survival of their businesses,” the anonymous writer states.

Sustainable Development Goals Taking Center Stage

The Ukraine war is also reducing Europe's reliance on Russian energy, thereby reinforcing the urgency of the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals, a plan that is absolutely central to The Great Reset. In lockstep with the Great Reset, policymakers around the world are using the sanctions against the Russian energy sector to accelerate the transition to “green” energy.

On a side note, back in 2011, the HuffPost actually published an article debating whether nuclear war might be helpful for reversing global warming.⁵ And here we are in 2022, when war is being used to push the “green” agenda forward. Is it a coincidence? Or has war always been part of the plan?

According to HuffPost, NASA scientists had modeled the effects of war involving 100 Hiroshima-level bombs, the equivalent of 0.03% of the global nuclear arsenal. The researchers concluded that in such an event, “5 million metric tons of black carbon would be swept up into the lowest portion of the atmosphere,” resulting in global cooling.

A “small-scale war” might lower the global temperature an average of 2.25 degrees F for two to three years. Tropical areas might see a drop in temperature between 5.4 and 7.2 degrees F.

While the Green New Deal may sound attractive (who doesn't want a pollution-free world?), ultimately, it's all about creating a control system in which the world's resources are owned by the richest of the rich, while the rest of the population can be controlled through the allocation of those resources, including energy. As explained in the Winter Oak article:

“Under such an economic construct, asset holding conglomerates can redirect the flow of global capital by aligning investments with the UN's SDGs and configuring them as Environmental, Social, and Corporate Governance (ESG) compliant so that new international markets can be built on the disaster and misery of potentially hundreds of millions of people reeling from the economic collapse caused by war.

Therefore, the war offers a huge impetus for the governments pushing the reset to actively pursue energy independence, shape markets towards 'green and inclusive growth' and eventually move populations towards a cap-and-trade system, otherwise known as a carbon credit economy.

This will centralize power in the hands of stakeholder capitalists under the benevolent guise of reinventing capitalism through fairer and greener means, using deceptive slogans like 'Build Back Better' without sacrificing the perpetual growth imperative of capitalism."

Food Shortages Are a Boon to Synthetic Food Industry

The war in Ukraine and the Russia's decision to block exports of fertilizer and food crops will also create food shortages, and this too plays right into the Great Reset plan. In recent years, we've been urged by Great Reset front men like Bill Gates to stop eating real meat, and switch to synthetic lab-grown meat instead. Of course, Gates is invested in these fake food technologies.

Making people reliant on patented synthetic food will benefit the globalists in more ways than one. People will get sicker, and hence more reliant on government aid. They'll be dependent on food produced by monopolies and hence easier to control. And, over time, as people forget how to grow and raise food, the ability to control the global population will increase.

Sanctions Against Russia May Speed Up the Control Grid

Winter Oak also predicts that:⁶

"Russia's exclusion from SWIFT (The Society for Worldwide Interbank Financial Telecommunication) foreshadows an economic reset which will generate precisely the kind of blowback necessary for corralling large swathes of the global population into a technocratic control grid.

As several economists have opined, weaponizing SWIFT, CHIPS (The Clearing House Interbank Payments System) and the U.S. Dollar against Russia will only spur geopolitical rivals like China to accelerate the process of de-dollarization.

The main benefactor of economic sanctions against Russia appears to be China which can reshape the Eurasian market by encouraging member states of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO) and BRICS to bypass the SWIFT ecosystem and settle cross-border international payments in the Digital Yuan.

While the demand for cryptocurrencies will see a massive spike, this is likely to encourage many governments to increasingly regulate the sector through public blockchains and enforce a multilateral ban on decentralized cryptocurrencies.

The shift to crypto could be the dress rehearsal to eventually expedite plans for programmable money overseen by a federal regulator, leading to the greater accretion of power in the hands of a powerful global technocracy and thus sealing our enslavement to financial institutions.

I believe this war will bring currencies to parity, therefore heralding a new Bretton Woods moment which promises to transform the operation of international banking and macroeconomic cooperation through the future adoption of central bank digital currencies."

As if on cue, the White House, March 9, 2022, issued an executive order on "Ensuring Responsible Development of Digital Assets."⁷ According to this order, technological advances in digital assets have "profound implications for the protection of consumers, investors, and businesses, including data privacy and security; financial stability and systemic risk; crime; national security; the ability to exercise human rights; financial inclusion and equity; and energy demand and climate change."

“Inconsistent controls” to defend against risks — which run the gamut from system integrity and crime prevention to financial inclusion and equity, and combating climate change and pollution — now “necessitate an evolution and alignment of the United States Government approach to digital assets.”

There’s also the potential for a cyber attack on critical banking infrastructure, which would result in a global demand for increased cyber security. This, again, is precisely what the technocratic elite want and need, as it would facilitate the introduction of digital identity and the surveillance network that goes along with it.

The Rise of Global Technocracy

According to the Winter Oak author, the economic implications of the Ukraine war may be so disastrous they may necessitate the financial shortfall with injection of private capital, and this “will effectively render the traditional separation of powers between central banking institutions and governments obsolete.”

Central banks will then be in a position where they can disproportionately influence the economy of entire nations, effectively undermining national sovereignty. In short, this situation would enable a global technocracy to take over and monopolize the global decision-making process.

Fear Is the Tool of Tyrants

As noted by investigative journalist Whitney Webb in her March 2, 2022, article, “Ukraine and the New Al Qaeda,”⁸ the war in Ukraine appears to be the manifestation of a CIA “prophesy” pushed over the past two years, which predicted that “a ‘transnational white supremacist network’ with alleged ties to the Ukraine conflict will be the next global catastrophe to befall the world as the threat of COVID-19 recedes.”

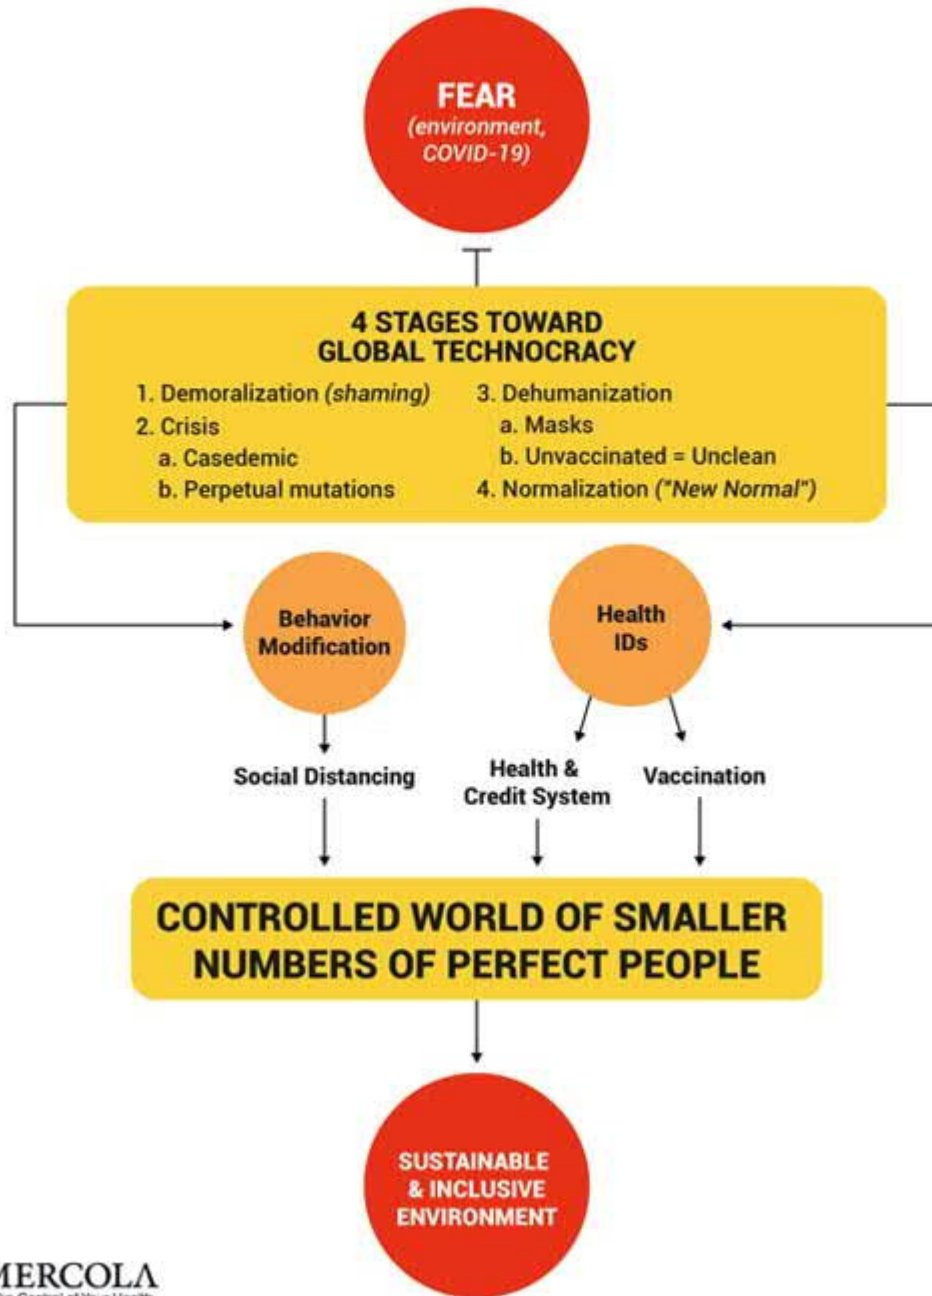

In short, the Ukraine-Russia conflict may be “the opening act for the newest iteration of the seemingly endless ‘War on Terror,’” Webb writes. This, again, goes back to the technocrats’ need to manufacture justifications for the implementation of a Great Reset.

They need us to live in fear, because a fearful people will willingly give emergency powers to leaders, who in turn will take your rights away from you “for your own safety.” Over the past two years, even our right to speak our minds has been taken from us, and people who counter the official narrative have been identified as “the No. 1 domestic terrorist threat.”⁹

Our governments have turned neighbor against neighbor, parent against child and friend against friend. Every time we give in and adopt their hateful rhetoric as our own, they win and we lose. They win by pitting us against each other, because if we hate and fight each other, we won’t hate and fight them — and they know it.
